Dear Mr. Streibert:

In Mr. Dulles' absence, I am taking the liberty of forwarding to you the attached correspondence concerning the merger of the American Academy of Asian Studies and the College of the Pacific.

As you will note, I have indicated to Mr. E. Howard Chase that we feel your Agency is in a much better position to promote this worthwhile cause, than is CIA.

Dear Mr. Chase:

In Mr. Dulles' absence from the city, I should like to thank you for your letter of 18 March concerning the merger of the American Academy of Asian Studies and the College of the Pacific.

Asian study in this country was not considered seriously in the colleges and universities until the outbreak of World War II, when we suddenly realized that our store of knowledge about Asia was pitifully small and inadequate in our contact with the Asian countries. Almost overnight centers of Asian studies sprang up to meet the demand. While a great deal has been done in educational institutions throughout the country, particularly since the end of the war, there is still room to do more. The news of the merger of the American Academy of Asian Studies with the College of the Pacific comes as a great step in the right direction and in the further improvement of East-West understanding.

Although we agree that this event should be widely publicized here and abroad, it is felt that the U. S. Information Agency is in a much more advantageous position than is our Agency, to promote this worthwhile cause in their over-all effort of furthering good international relations. I have, therefore, taken the liberty of forwarding your letter, together with the copy of Mr. Gainsborough's letter, to Mr. Theodore Streibert, Director of the U. S. Information Agency. Mr. Streibert's address is 1770 Pennsylvania Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Chase:

As Mr. Dulles will be temporarily out of town, I have the honor of answering your letter to him dated 18 March 1954, enclosing a copy of Mr. Gainsborough's letter.

Asian study in this country was not considered seriously in our colleges and universities until the outbreak of World War II when we suddenly realized that our store of knowledge about Asia was woefully small and inadequate in our contact with the Asian countries. Almost overnight centers of Asian studies sprang up to meet the demand. While a great deal has been done in Asian studies by educational institutions throughout the country, particularly since the end of the war, there is still room to do more. The news of the merger of Mr. Gainsborough's American Academy of Asian Studies with the College of the Pacific comes as a great step toward the right direction and certainly portends well in the further improvement of East-West understanding. This merger has our heartfelt congratulations.

I agree with you that this event should be widely publicized here and abroad. However, I feel the United States Information Agency is in a much more advantageous position to promote this worthwhile cause in its overall effort of furthering good international relations than our agency. You may reach Mr. Theodore Streibert, Director of the United States Information Agency, at 1776 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Washington, D. C.

Sincerely yours,

C. P. Gable
